“ They don't make them like Mr. Sterling W. Fisher anymore and I can say that from personal experiences. You see, I just happened to date my twin daughter's mother who lived right next store to Sterling. I was in high school when we first met and from the moment he saw me he let it be known tha Ms Barbara Simms daughter was in his watchful eyes and I better come correct!

He loved to rib me as often as possible, on everything from you need to get an oil change on that car, some time this century, don't you think?" to "Do you know how to use any tools?" to "Where you been? I haven't seen you in a few, you hiding from me?" Then he would tell me to open up the hood of my car and he would proceed to fix it for free.

I always looked forward to talking with him whenever we saw each other. When Janelle and I had our twin daughter's he looked after them and watched them as though they were his own girls. Always making sure they knew he had their back, just as he had their grandmother's and mom's back. He watched me grow into a young man and took pride in the fact that I was doing ok in his book. I knew that because he told me so.

When I think of what it means to be a man, I can easily vision Sterling. He had a knack for making you feel better about yourself, just by his presence and confidence in himself. He made a differecne in a lot of peoples lives, mine included and I was blessed to have known him.

Rest in Peace Soldier...
